Lines on the Death of ex-President Polk.

BY JOHN R. PEARSE.

He eagle has stooped from his airy height,
His form has gone out from its path in the sky,
Statesman has fallen in his blaze of renown,
His brow all encircled with Fame's laurel crown,
Then follow his grave—lay him down in his rest,
Where Memory shall water the turf on his breast,
And the soft winds of summer sigh o'er his repose
In his own Tennessee, where the Cumberland flows.

His name is enrolled with each mighty name
That Glory or Country shall hand down to fame,
His name is enrolled in the annals of the brave,
To echo forever from sea unto sea.

His career was all finished, his laurels were won
When the race of the foremost is scarcely begun,
And the finger of Glory shall point to his name
As the greatest in years, but the equal in fame.

While red Bona Vista looms up in the fight,
Like a meteor's blaze in the darkness of night;
While the gates of the mountains their secrets unfold,
While California o'erflows with rivers of gold;

While the sweet name of freedom is our glory and pride,
While the broad wave of Empire rolls up like the tide,
While new States, like new stars, on the horizon shall shine,
What name shall be brighter, emblazoned than thine?

Then follow his grave—lay him down in his rest,
Where Memory shall water the turf on his breast,
And the soft winds of summer sigh o'er his repose
In his own Tennessee, where the Cumberland flows.

advantages over other modes of appointment. Our judicial stations have been filled with as much, if not more ability, learning, and weight of character, than formerly. So far, the people of our State have appeared to perform this delicate duty with as much intelligence and discernment, and I conceive, with more integrity of purpose, than any other appointing power. We have seen the electors of districts, in the midst of political party excitement, elect judges differing from them on political questions; and I believe no instance has yet occurred of the election of a judge, in our State, upon mere party questions.

Upon the whole, after a careful observation of the operation of our system, I give it as my decided opinion, that the experiment of electing judges by the direct vote of the people, has proved eminently successful in our State.

I am very respectfully, your obedient servant, J. A. QUITMAN.

In order to create prejudice and dissatisfaction in the ranks of the Democracy the Jackson Southron and all the diminutive organs of Whiggery in this State, have gone as far back as 1824, to find the political pedigree of Gen. Quitman. The Southron dived deep into the files of old newspapers, and came up with the number of a paper published in this city in 1824, wherein it appears that Gen. Quitman acted as the Secretary of a meeting friendly to the election of John Quincy Adams to the Presidency, and the Southron takes it for granted that he voted for Mr. Adams, and charges the General with a crime and an outrage upon the Democracy down to 1840. The charge is not true. Gen. Q. never voted for J. Quincy Adams, and we find him in 1824, an active member of the friends of Crawford, and not Adams. Will the Southron make the correction? We presume not. It is not customary with the Whig editors to correct mistakes. It would have a bad effect upon the prospects of Gen. Quitman's Whig opponent, for whose benefit the mistake was purposely made.

In 1828 Gen. Quitman again voted against Mr. Adams, and declined running as the Federal candidate for Representative in the Legislature.

At a political discussion in Liberty, in 1836, between Mr. Posey and Gen. Quitman, Mr. Posey propounded this question: "Did you not support John Quincy Adams's re-election in 1828?" Gen. Q. replied: "NO." But admitting the statement of the Southron to be true, what does it amount to? Just nothing at all. If Gen. Quitman was an Adams man twenty-four years ago, he should have credit for discovering the fact that he was acting with the Federalists, and as soon as he was convinced of the dangerous tendencies of the Adams party, he "forsook the spoil encumbered foe" and joined the State Rights Party, the only party who has stood up, through good and through evil report, to Southern rights and Southern institutions. He has been an uncompromising Democrat ever since.

We might here draw a parallel between Henry Clay and Gen. Quitman, but as we are not disposed to throw salt upon the already incensed feelings of that unfortunate gentleman's very sensitive friends, we must content ourselves with the remark that Henry Clay was a good Democrat in 1811, and that if Gen. Quitman acted wisely in turning Democrat, Clay acted the part of an idiot when he turned Federalist.

Was I wrong?—It is right and just to give publicity to an incident in the storming of the city of Mexico, which illustrates the bravery and patriotic enthusiasm of Gen. Quitman, but which his industry had suppressed from the knowledge of the country.

The following is an extract of a letter from the mounted rifle regiment (Major Loring) who fell at the head of this regiment at the very entrance of the city of Mexico, by a wound which deprived him of one of his arms. The extract is an eloquent tribute from a gallant soldier to the bravery of his distinguished commander. "The day was a sad one, and a friend in every state corner."

"Gen. Quitman, at the head of my regiment, when I was shot. We were the last of our regiment to enter the city of Mexico, and the day was a sad one, and a friend in every state corner."

After I fell, he armed himself with one of my rifles in their charge upon the Garita de Belen, fired his last cartridge, then tied his handkerchief to its muzzle, and waved his gallant soldiers over the breast-work—being the first to mount amid the terrible carnage that followed. I'll venture to say there are few instances in history where one so high in rank and advanced in life has thus had, and availed himself of, the brilliant opportunity of wreathing around his brow so distinct a title to the honor of being regarded the bravest of the brave."

Highly Important from California—Letter from Gen. Persifer F. Smith.

The Washington Union publishes the following extract of a letter, dated San Francisco, received by the last steamer, from Gen. Persifer F. Smith, which states some important facts:

You only think of California in connection with gold; and, indeed, a most wonderful connexion it is. As to the extent of country holding the precious metal—and the comparative facility with which it is procured, there has been no exaggeration. The whole slope of the Sierra Nevada on the western side, or a length of more than four hundred miles, and in a belt of at least forty, contains it in greater or smaller quantities; and it may extend still further, as further research is made. It is found simply by digging, and washing the earth; no expensive machinery, and no intricate chemical process are necessary to develop the magic hoard. A pickaxe, shovel, or even a butcher's knife, to loosen the earth and stones, and the most simple basin have been as richly rewarded as the most approved machines from other countries. Good luck in the laborer choosing his location has more than compensated for want of skill. The real difficulties lie in the hardships to be encountered in the remote uninhabited spot where the gold is found. Want of food, overworking excited by success, bad water, exposure and dissipation, all combine to exact a heavy tribute for the wealth when found. All are not successful, but every one works on, hoping that the next blow of his pick will disclose a treasure that will surpass all that he has hitherto heard of. Many die unheeded, many come off sick; but there are ten arriving from each quarter of the globe to replace every one who goes. Chinese, Sandwich Islanders, French, and Irish, outnumber as yet the Americans, but the latter will soon have their share. Provisions, woolen clothing, liquors, kitchen and mining utensils, sell at enormous profits at the mines; other articles scarcely sell at all. Woman's gear is altogether a drug.

The amount of gold hitherto found is hard to determine. It is said about $400,000 have been exported. I shall be able in a few weeks, from facts I am collecting, to make some approximation to it.

In the meantime, all this is disastrous for us. No servants are to be had; $250 a month has been refused in my presence by a cook. All my servants have quit, and yesterday I engaged one at $100 a month, because he is too sick to go to the mines, but I shall certainly lose him if he gets his health.

The quartermaster pays $5,000 a year, for the house I live in, and it would make a poor toll-house for a country bridge. The climate is cold all the year round, and foggy in the summer. The hills are bare, and the country is all hills—(forgive the bull.) The beef is execrable, and vegetables none, and nobody has time to catch fish, if there are any—bold to catch.

Any one who will come here to dig gold, or bring goods with him to sell to the diggers, will make money. No other business will succeed. Whoever comes must bring a house with him—there are but few here, and lumber is $500 per thousand.

News from a Mississippi in California. The following letter, addressed to a gentleman in our city, is from Mr. J. S. Allen of Missouri. It will be read with interest.

SAN FRANCISCO, March 12, 1849.

Dear Sir—I shall attempt to give you a short description of this country as far as my observation and knowledge extend, though my mind is so much occupied that it is very difficult for me to write. We are situated on the bay of the Pacific, and the bay is very large, and the water is very deep, and the land is very fertile, and the climate is very pleasant, and the people are very kind, and the country is very beautiful, and the scenery is very grand, and the views are very fine, and the air is very pure, and the food is very good, and the drink is very pure, and the houses are very comfortable, and the streets are very clean, and the government is very good, and the laws are very wise, and the people are very happy, and the country is very rich, and the land is very fertile, and the water is very deep, and the air is very pure, and the food is very good, and the drink is very pure, and the houses are very comfortable, and the streets are very clean, and the government is very good, and the laws are very wise, and the people are very happy, and the country is very rich, and the land is very fertile, and the water is very deep, and the air is very pure, and the food is very
